ISSUP Newsletter: Issue 31

In this edition of the ISSUP newsletter we are exploring all things digital with a focus on e-health, m-health and the ways technology is being used in public health, recovery and treatment.

So what is e-health? When we talk about e-health we are exploring the opportunities in public health and health services for information and treatment to be enhanced by the use of the internet and other technologies. This might be through the use of applications on smartphones or it could be through the use of AI in the management of health records.

According to the World Health Organisation (WHO) 58% of member states have an e-health strategy. The use of technology is widely accepted to improve access to information and treatment. We have collected a series of examples of ways in which technology is being used to in the field of substance use, prevention and treatment. Read more in the selection of articles below or in our e-health special here.

In this edition we have included research on socioeconomic inequalities in health and information on some excellent events taking place over June and July including the EMCDDA European Drugs Summer School and the 22nd International AIDS conference.
