Substance use and homelessness: Barriers to support

The second webinar in our series on homelessness and substance use was presented by Dr Hannah Carver who focused on the different barriers that people experience when trying to access support. The presentation also explored the evidence base for different interventions to address these barriers.

Why make relapse prevention more mindful?

Traditionally, relapse prevention for addictive disorders has been based on cognitive-behavioral therapy. The development of mindfulness-based relapse prevention (MBRP) by the University of Washington, integrates core aspects of relapse prevention with mindfulness practices. Learn more: ISSUP
